SHOPS' VID & ALARM PLEA

RETAILERS have called for funding to give staff panic buttons and bodycams amid a surge in violent shoplifting.

They also want Scottish Government grants to upgrade security systems and CCTV in stores.

Hussan Lal, president of the Federation of Independent Retailers, made the plea after thefts in Scotland soared by more than a fifth this year.

His letter to Justice Secretary Angela Constance said: "We urge you to consider financial support to provide better security in small shops. Panic buttons and body cameras would help prevent crime and offer anxious shopworkers some sense of security."

The ex-cop called for £1,500 grants for shops and blasted a trial scheme in the north east where some less serious crimes are not being investigated. He claimed: "Shoplifting is perceived as victimless and has effectively been decriminalised."

We revealed yesterday that Dundee is Scotland's shoplifting capital following a 37 per cent surge in thefts last year.

Nationwide there were 30,202 cases, a 21 per cent hike. An rise in criminal gang activity has been blamed.

Last night Tory justice spokesman Russell Findlay said: "Under-siege shopworkers have been betrayed by the SNP's weak justice agenda."

The Scottish Government said: "Our unique Partnership against Acquisitive Crime Strategy, led by Police Scotland, outlines an approach to prevention, deterrence and enforcement around a range of crimes, including shoplifting."
